Statement Regarding Reuters News & Media Copyright Matters

If you or your company received a letter or email from our firm regarding a copyright infringement claim on behalf of Reuters News & Media, Inc. (“Reuters”), the international news agency, you might be wondering “is this legitimate?” The answer is yes, it is. Finnerty Osterreicher & Abdulla has been engaged by Reuters and its non-attorney partner, PicRights International, concerning copyright matters and the enforcement of Reuters’ copyright interests.

Simply removing the image(s) from your website will not serve to resolve the issue of unlicensed use. If you believe that you received our firm’s correspondence in error, i.e., you or the organization had a license to reproduce the image at the time of publication, please advise immediately. We understand that users sometimes obtain pre-publication licenses from third-party vendors other than Reuters, and we are more than willing to review and consider such.

If you have been contacted by our firm – whether by Joseph Finnerty, Mickey Osterreicher, Karim Abdulla, or Amy Yakawiak – we urge you to give your prompt attention to the information transmitted to you and to not disregard those materials.¹ To resolve the matter referenced in the Claim Letter, you or your attorney should direct your communications to the attorney or staff member who contacted you:

- Joseph Finnerty: jmf@foalegal.com (716-340-2200 x. 223)
- Mickey Osterreicher: mho@foalegal.com (716-340-2200 x. 224)
- Karim Abdulla: kaa@foalegal.com (716-340-2200 x. 225)
- Amy Yakawiak: amy@foalegal.com

Very truly yours,

Finnerty Osterreicher & Abdulla
